MIXED UP.

I've wandered through the village, Tom,

To listen to the mocking bird,

In the cottage by the sea.

Ready lay down to be at While coming through the eye;

Let me know him for his mother,

Says the spider to the fly.

The colored girl and poor old Ned

Now sell our national song

On the hand of mine—

But take your time Miss Long,

I'm lonely since my mother died—

Remember, don't you forget.

We're all nodding through the world,

Then rest, dear old Ned.

Hark! hear an angel sing,

Alas! we're not dead.

We're coming, father Abraham,

Along with angels.

The song my mother used to sing,

The wearing of the green—

And I'll be with you.

Today is sweet sixteen.

The nice young man and Fairy Belle

Are sitting in the lane.

The captain with his whiskers

Has married the maid.

How many more the boys,

For Johnny's sake the boys,

Yankee Doodle, Hail Columbia!

And I don't care a cent.

(From the Abingdon Virginian.)

Katy Sage, the Lost Child.

Interesting Narrative.

For several months past, we have been inserting on first page of the Virginian, each week, an original article, upon some subject of interest to our readers, and among them the narratives of Indian depredations upon the early settlers of Southwestern Virginia. The following incidents, for the particulars of which we are indebted to Dr. J. W. Sage, of Lee county, are more thrillingly and interesting than anything we have yet published upon the subject of the troubles of the first settlers of this once wild and romantic but now quiet and beautiful country.

Katy Sage was the daughter of James and Louis Sage, who lived on Elk Creek in what is now Grayson county, in 1742. The morning of the 11th of April in that year was bright and balmy, the early wild flowers were bursting into bloom, the songbirds were trilling their melody in the budding forest, the bespangled trout were sporting in the crystal waters of the mountain stream, and all was peaceful and joyous around the cabin of the pioneer. The husband and father was preparing his clothes for the summer, and the wife and mother were arranging for the day's washing. She had gone to
